

The Year of the Entrepreneur

Volume 3 Issue 6

February 2011

Canada Designates 2011 as the Year of the Entrepreneur

Last November, more than 100 countries celebrated Global Entrepreneurship Week and now 2011 has been recognized as the Year of the Entrepreneur in Canada.

There are a number of reasons to celebrate Canadian entrepreneurship. For one, small and medium-sized businesses contribute to Canada's ongoing economic success. Resilient and innovative Canadian entrepreneurs help create jobs, strengthen communities and encourage competitiveness.

If you are wondering how you can grow your business, how to start a business or many other issues, the web site www.canadabusiness.ca is a great resource. If you are already putting your entrepreneurial skills to use, you might want to further share your leadership skills and business expertise by becoming a mentor – inspiring others to pursue entrepreneurship.

Why does Canada need a Year of the Entrepreneur?

Being an entrepreneur is hard work. Many entrepreneurs work longer hours than salaried workers. Just the paperwork involved can be a daunting task. Government regulations, managing employees, dealing with suppliers all add to the stress of ownership.

Having a Year of the Entrepreneur will bring attention to the relevant views and issues around being an entrepreneur in Canada. So, yes, having a Canadian Year of the Entrepreneur is important!

What is intellectual property?

Intellectual property refers to the legal rights to ideas, inventions and creations in the industrial, scientific, literary and artistic fields. It also covers symbols, names, images, designs and models used in business. You may not realize it, but your business may be creating intellectual property assets that should be protected.

Benefits to Business

Establishing intellectual property protection for your goods, services or brand names is important to business for a variety of reasons. Intellectual property can:

- establish a right to and ownership of an intellectual creation. This enables the intellectual property owners to profit from their creative efforts.
- prevent competitors from copying or closely imitating a business' product or service.
- protect a business' distinct identity, image and ultimately its reputation.
- build customer trust and loyalty by establishing a unique brand name or image.

As a business person, you should consider formally identifying your intellectual property assets as part of your strategic planning. Learn more about what intellectual property is and its importance to business.

The Government of Canada web site – www.canadabusiness.ca – provides a concise and clear introduction to intellectual property, the Canadian Intellectual Property Office and types of intellectual property. It also covers strategies for protecting and exploiting intellectual property.

On the web site there is an Intellectual Property Toolkit which provides information, tutorials and links that answer most intellectual property questions asked by business people. The Canadian Intellectual Property Office is the organization that will provide you with what you need to know and do to protect your intellectual property rights.

Forms of Intellectual Property

On the web site you will find sub-topics to learn about the types of intellectual property protection that may apply to your intellectual activity:

- Patents cover inventions or improvements to an existing invention.
- Trade-marks are words, symbols or designs used to distinguish a product or service.
- Copyrights provide protection for artistic, dramatic, musical and literary creations.
- Industrial designs are the visual features, such as shape, configuration and pattern, applied to a finished article.
- Integrated circuit topography is the three-dimensional electronic circuit designs used in technology.
