Business owners identify keys to their success, CFIB survey

By LEIGH DOYLE | APRIL 14, 2011

What do small businesses credit for the success of their companies? A new survey from the Canadian Federation of Independent Business (CFIB) found that 62% credit employees, 60% say customer loyalty and 59% say pure hard work.

“While most studies focus mainly on the personal characteristics of the successful entrepreneur, this is a one-of-a-kind, insider’s perspective into the winning recipe for a business venture – and it speaks volumes about the character of small business owners that they give top billing to their employees and customers,” said CFIB president, Catherine Swift.

“Clearly there is much more to running a successful business than just having a business plan.”

The survey collected responses from 8,900 businesses across Canada and asked them to answer in their own words what are the keys to success. Comments focused on the importance of honesty and fairness: “conduct your affairs in an honest and open manner to build a good client base and good community image,” said one business. “Always treat your employees fairly, and then in the tough times they will be there by your side,” said another.

Other important elements of success include the product(s)/service(s) (54%), passion for what I do (34%), innovation (18%), family support (17%), and defined business plans (11%).

“Clearly there is much more to running a successful business than just having a business plan,” said CFIB’s vice-president of research Doug Bruce.

The results also show that entrepreneurs are deeply connected to their communities and contribute in a number of ways, including employing locals (85%), financial donations (74%), donating goods or services (72%), sponsoring sports teams (59%), promoting local charities (47%) and donating their time (47%).

“It’s no wonder that businesses give back so generously to their communities when they credit the community of employees and customers for their success. Communities and small business thrive together,” concluded Bruce.

The report is titled The Secrets of Entrepreneurial Success and is the first in a series of short reports on entrepreneurship to commemorate the CFIB’s 40th anniversary and celebrates 2011 as the federally designated Year of the Entrepreneur.
